A Legacy Built to Last

Calvis Wyant Celebrates 40 Years

Tony Calvis still remembers the dust. Not the kind that settles quickly, but the kind that lingers on your boots as a new idea is birthed.

In the early 1980s, Calvis got his start as a craftsman, learning the trade from the “literal” ground up. When he set out to build his own home, he was surprised by the overwhelming nature of all the decisions and the process of turning a plan into reality.

That moment inspired an idea that turned into a process which is today the company’s signature blueprint.

Together with his friend, Gary Wyant, a talented architectural designer, Calvis co-founded Calvis Wyant 40 years ago. Behind every custom home stood a client with a career, a family and no time to manage thousands of decisions. So, they built a system. Every detail decided before the first shovel hit the ground with no delayed decisions or costly pauses in the construction process.

For Calvis Wyant, 40 years in the industry represents more than a milestone. It reflects a legacy built on precision, partnership and a deep understanding of what it truly means to create a luxury home.

“Some may say it takes a bit longer up front, but I assure you it will be a better process that finishes on time and on budget,” he says of his firm that designs, builds and maintains luxury homes.

Over four decades, that discipline carried them through everything, including the crash of 2008. Where others stalled, they renovated distressed properties, stayed conservative and kept their team working.

But the real foundation wasn’t just process. It was partnership.

Tony speaks of Gary’s rare spatial genius as the ability to see what doesn’t yet exist. Their joint leadership has created a culture rooted in service, collaboration and trust. About 400 homes later, that chemistry still defines the company. Calvis shares their enormous gratitude for a team that has become like family, many of whom have two and even three decades of service with the company.

Today, as Calvis Wyant marks 40 years, Calvis isn’t focused on the past. He’s focused on preparing the next generation to carry the standard forward for the next 40 years.

Because in the end, he says, it was never just about the homes. It was about serving their clients. “Building a luxury home should be on the short list of life’s best experiences,” he says.
